Reflection:

Have you ever heard the phrase “actions speak louder than words”? Today we learn that what we do and how we live tells others about who we are and what we believe. A couple of weeks ago we celebrated Easter and Holy Week where Jesus’ act of dying on the cross and then rising showed us how much God loves us. Today’s first reading tells about the apostles getting into big trouble and being punished for teaching about Jesus. They showed their love and respect for Jesus by continuing to teach even though they were told by the government to stop. In the Gospel, we hear about the Disciples fishing but not catching anything. (Does this story sound familiar? Remember the same thing happened when Jesus first called some of the Disciples to come with him. It makes me wonder if the Disciples were really bad fishermen and Jesus picked them because he knew they really needed his help!). A guy that they don’t recognize tells them to try again. They do and catch tons of fish. The Disciples suddenly remember this has happened before, “It must be Jesus!” They cooked some of the fish. Jesus then shared the fish and bread with them as he did at the Last Supper. It was through Jesus’ actions that they knew who he was. Our actions show who we are, too. We may say that we love and follow Jesus but do our actions say that too? Are we kind to everyone, even the people that others don’t like or that don’t like us? Do we go to Church every week? Do we respect our teachers and our parents? Do we volunteer to help others? Do we stand up for others? Do we speak out against things that we believe are wrong like the war?

Discussion:

Is it easier to say that you are a follower of Jesus or to show that you are a follower of Jesus? Why?

Can you think of examples of someone whose words say one thing but whose actions say something else? (For example: Sue says she’s Mindy’s friend but when Mindy is not around, Sue tells Clare all of Mindy’s secrets.)

Activity: Charades

Separate the kids into groups of 3. In their groups they are to create a scene showing someone being a follower of Christ. The only rule: NO TALKING. Each group can then take a turn acting out their scene for the class. When they have finished, the class can guess what is going on in the scene and briefly discuss it.
